Those concentrations are: specialized concentrations that reflect their specific interest. In addition to taking core courses, CAD majors select one out of three concentrations: action research methods, policy and advocacy, and policy and advocacy. Addressories of child and adolescent development, diverse families in a globalized context, action research methods, and policy and advocacy are offered in community settings and classrooms. The core courses prepare students for programs, services, and policies for children, youth, and families that address theories of child and adolescent development, diverse families in a globalized context, action research methods, and policy and advocacy.

The Bachelor of Arts degree in Child and Adolescent Development (CAD) is designed to meet the educational and career needs of students with a variety of interests. Students who wish to complete a bachelor’s degree as well as a Child Development Permit to work as a licensed child care provider in a preschool or child care center will choose the Early Childhood concentration. Students who wish to teach in elementary schools will choose the School Age Child and Family concentration, which provides a subject matter preparation waiver program but a child development foundation as well. This concentration is excellent preparation for a post-baccalaureate Multiple Subject Teaching Credential program. Others who wish to work in out-of-school time programs such as after-school programs, probation, recreation, residential treatment facilities for school-age children and youth, or other community-based programs for children and youth will choose specialized study in the Youth Work and Out of School Time concentration.

The outlook for careers working with children and adolescents is positive. Surveys of employers and community agencies that offer positions working with children, adolescents, and families indicate that there is a need for professionals in those areas who have a strong foundation of knowledge and skills about child and adolescent development. Graduates who want to work with young children and their families as infant-toddler specialists, pre-school teachers, or child care providers are in high demand. There are 6,000 children in San Francisco alone on waiting lists for childcare programs. There is a need for well-educated, experienced professionals to staff and administer quality child care and education programs, particularly as the existing center-based workforce with B.A. degrees or higher starts to retire. There is also need to expand the ethnic and linguistic diversity of early child care providers. B.A. degree providers/teachers are particularly needed in centers serving both infants and preschoolers, working with dual language learners, and working with children with special needs.

Even with state fiscal challenges and changes in requirements for teacher preparation, the increase in school-age children in California and the significant numbers of teachers who will retire within the next few years, means there will be a need for qualified, fully prepared professionals.
to teach kindergarten through 5th grade. Students who plan to enter a post–baccalaureate multiple subject teaching credential program for elementary school teaching can complete a multiple subject matter waiver program in lieu of taking a Commission–approved subject matter examination (currently CSET). The CAD degree strengthens pre–service preparation in subject matter as well as in developmental knowledge about child and adolescents.
