CFS 9010 Color (Units: 1.2)
The course is about color and its application to various field of design and retail. Color and light are inseparable, so this course will present color in an integrated form. We will cover detailed information about color and its effects including the latest research findings on color and health, color and psychology, the physiological effects of color, color and its cultural impact. The information presented will be in a condensed form and draws from a wide range of scientifically accurate studies. It can be applied to interior design, architectural design, fashion design, visual merchandising, landscape design and health care facilities and retail uses. For example, past students in the health care field have found color study an invaluable tool in making their physical therapy facilities and patient waiting rooms more patient-oriented which has improved treatment outcomes. An increased knowledge of how to apply color across the various design fields has proved equally effective. Knowledge of how to use color effectively in retail applications cannot be underestimated. Knowing how to attract potential customers through the use of color can be an invaluable business tool. This course is also ideal for those without a previous background in color study because it supplies information in a condensed form while showing specific ways to apply color effectively to daily life. At the completion of this course, you will have gained a more thorough understanding of how color impacts every aspect of your life and how to apply that information to a wide range of uses and professions.

CFS 9011 Design Trends (Units: 1.2)
The Design Trends course will enable you to gain a better understanding of how past, present and future designs blend to create trends which influence virtually all fields of design including interior design, fashion design, architecture and landscape design, and visual merchandising. This course is offered in an integrated format which includes the principles of design, the major influences on design trends, a discussion of designers and manufacturers, materials and methods of construction and the trend toward green, environmentally friendly design and its applications.

CFS 9012 Design and Merchandising (Units: 1.2)
The Design & Merchandising course is a particularly valuable course in light of today’s economy. It will provide techniques in design merchandising, concepts in the contemporary environment, multicultural consumer need, how to plan and develop visual presentations, the tools of merchandising and targeted merchandising as applied to the fields of interior design, fashion design, real estate staging, retail, architecture and landscape design. This is a hands-on course where you will be participating in assigned projects that will further your understanding of merchandising. Knowing how to effectively present a product or design is key to selling it. At the completion of this course you will have an increased knowledge of how to analyze and promote a design or product and to effectively present it in the current market.
