Program Scope
The German program offers a comprehensive and carefully designed program for undergraduate and graduate studies in language, literature, culture, and linguistics.

The program addresses the needs of students at all levels, from those without prior knowledge of German to those with advanced, near-native, or native competency in German. The curriculum is designed to enable students to develop language proficiency in accordance with the nationally recognized ACTFL standards. Learning German will open up new cultural perspectives and allow students to communicate with 120 million people in German-speaking countries.

The program serves students from the entire University. Many of the students enrolled are double majors, who concurrently pursue a degree in disciplines such as international relations, humanities, history, psychology, creative writing, communication studies, and music. Students can also opt for a European Studies Minor.

In cooperation with the Office of International Programs, we encourage students to study abroad. Through the California State University (CSU) International Program, students may study, for example, at the Universität of Tübingen, Universität of Heidelberg, or other institutions of higher learning. Such opportunities give students an immersion experience, helping to build and reinforce language skills while earning units towards graduation. The program also facilitates paid summer internships in German-speaking Europe.
